

Paris Hilton Harvard Lampoon's 'Woman of the Year'

Paris Hilton will be receiving the award for the 'Woman of the Year' named so by Harvard Lampoon magazine.

According to United Press International, Paris will make an appearance at Harvard University to accept the award on February 6. She is expected to address the student body in the Harvard Square in Cambridge, Regent Releasing said, the studio who is managing her new movie, the comedy 'The Hottie and the Nottie' which will be released nationwide February 8.

All Harvard undergraduate community is invited to hear Paris give her acceptance speech.

Harvard University's Harvard Lampoon was founded in 1876, thus being the oldest humor magazine in the world.

Other women who received the 'Woman of the Year' award from Harvard Lampoon were Halle Berry, Scarlett Johansson and Sarah Jessica Parker.

'The Hottie and the Nottie' will probably be the movie for Valentine's Day. The story is a romantic one in which Paris plays the role of Cristabel 'Hottie' Abbott and Christine Lakin will be June 'Nottie' Phigg.

The two are friends, but as you can tell from their nicknames, Paris gets to be the sexy friend while Christine has her fun wearing all that make-up and be the less pretty one.

Paris's character refuses to out with Nate Cooper (Joel David Moore), who likes her since first grade, unless he finds a date for her friend.

She filmed the movie in January and February and is expected to be the perfect comedy for the lovers.

Paris also starred in the horror movie 'House of Wax' alongside Chad Michael Murray and Elisha Cuthbert.
